The Farmscaping for Beneficials Project of the Integrated Plant Protection Center at Oregon State University would like to invite all farmers who have participated in our previous programs and all those who are creating or interested in creating beneficial habitat on their farms, such as riparian areas, hedgerows, beetle banks or any form of insectary plantings, to be our guests for dinner and very stimulating conversation with other local farmers working on farm beneficial habitat.

John Eveland of Gathering Together Farm, Elanor O'Brien of Persephone Farm and Peter Kenagy of Kenagy Farm are just a few of the farmers who will be there to present and lead discussions on hedgerows, insectary plantings and beetle banks.

In the flavor of our past events, weather permitting, we will start with a stroll through Gathering Together Farm (GTF) to observe existing habitat including an established beetle bank. Then we will return to GTF's stunning, and very cozy, farm stand for an inspiring discussion of what's currently been working in terms beneficial habitat on the farm and what we want to see happen in the future. We will close with a superb organic dinner prepared by GTF's own chef, JC.
